Dear iKNOW Politics members,

KNOw Politics is pleased to share with you the first Newsletter issue of 2016. It was compiled by the iKNOW Politics Team and provides a snapshot of some recent highlights and upcoming activities. The past year was exciting and full for women in politics. Articles, blogs and books were written on women who have broken through the glass ceiling by reaching high positions in the political world. This newsletter highlights some of these stories and we invite you to browse our online library and news section for more. We hope that you will enjoy the content and encourage you to send any feedback or suggestions to connect@iknowpolitics.org.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Commission on the Status of Women 2016

Every year in March, representatives of Member States, UN entities, and civil society organizations from all regions gather at the United Nations Headquarters in New York for the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW) to evaluate progress on gender equality, identify challenges, set global standards and formulate concrete policies to promote gender equality and the advancement of women worldwide. This year, just a few days after International Women’s Day on March 8th, the sixtieth session of the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW60) was held from March 14-24. iKNOW Politics took part in a number of main and side events related to the subject of political participation of women and women empowerment by covering the meetings on social media and conducting interviews with women politicians, including women MPs from Kenya, Mauritania, Chile, Canada, Jordan, Tunisia and the European Parliament. All interviews will be posted here soon. Click here to view the CSW60 highlights that iKNOW Politics put together for those who missed the CSW.

E-Discussion on Parliamentary Oversight of Gender Equality

From January to March 2016, iKNOW Politics hosted an online discussion on ‘Parliamentary Oversight of Gender Equality’. Interested members shared their knowledge, experiences and lessons learned in the exercise of parliamentary oversight of gender equality laws, policies, programmes or budgetary allocations.
The iKNOW Politics team will summarize the responses into a consolidated reply which will feature in the second Global Parliamentary Report ‘Parliament's power to hold government to account: Realities and perspectives on oversight’ – a joint publication of the Inter-Parliamentary Union and the United Nations Development Programme.

Women, Peace and Security & UNSCR 1325

The United Nations Security Council Resolution 1325 (UNSCR 1325) on Women, Peace and Security is a critical tool to push for the participation of women in decision-making as well as in peacebuilding processes, to ensure that women are better protected from human rights violations and have access to justice and services to eliminate discrimination in conflict and post-conflict situations. In October 2015, the United Nations Security Council convened a High-level Review to assess 15 years of progress in implementation of the Resolution. This review was facilitated by the Global Study on the implementation of resolution 1325 and iKNOW Politics interviewed the lead author, Ms. Radhika Coomaraswamy. In addition, iKNOW Politics launched in November 2015 an e-Discussion on the implementation of the Resolution in the Arab States. Twelve responses were provided by experts and practitioners alike and compiled into a consolidated reply. The consolidated reply highlights success stories, as well as prevailing challenges specific to the Arab region and recommended actions to move the agenda forward. iKNOW Politics would like to extend its gratitude to those who took the time to contribute. Here are some key resources that iKNOW Politics featured on this topic during the e-Discussion.

More on Women, Peace and Security
Women in politics making the headlines

The past year saw several important elections across the globe and marked many victories for women politicians. Saudi women not only voted for the first time, but also ran in municipal elections. The United Arab Emirates appointed their first female Speaker of the Federal National Council (the national Parliament). In neighboring Oman, another milestone was reached when Dr Suad Mohammed Al Lawatiar became the first female Deputy Speaker after a vote by members of the State Council. In another first, Margaret Mensah-Williams, President of IPU’s Coordinating Committee of Women MPs, was named as Speaker of Namibia’s upper house of parliament, the National Council. She is the first woman to hold the post. Aung San Suu Kyi led her party to a majority win in Myanmar’s first openly contested election in 25 years, and Croatia and Mauritius elected their first female Heads of State, Ms. Kolinda Grabar-Kitarovic and Ms. Ameenah Gurib-Fakim respectively. In early 2016, Hilda Heine became the first female president of the Marshall Islands. Globally, there are now 12 female Heads of State, 11 Heads of Governments and 49 women who preside over one of the Houses of the 190 Parliaments.

INTERVIEWS
iKNOW Politics aims to bring women politicians, gender-sensitive men politicians as well as activists closer to our followers and interviews women who are bringing about positive changes. In 2015, iKNOW Politics has interviewed more than 25 prominent women and men who share their knowledge and personal stories and recommend actions to advance women’s participation in the public spheres. The interviews are available on our new YouTube channel, as well as on the iKNOW Politics website.

NEWS & RESOURCES
The iKNOW Politics team is committed to make available the latest resources on women’s political participation and leadership. The online library is a key feature of the platform, with more than 6600 resources, including research papers, legislative frameworks, online courses and training material, case studies, databases, and blogs. Another key feature is the clickable resource map allowing users to add and find country and region specific knowledge resources in four languages. The search functionalities of the resource map and the online library were recently enhanced.
Events
In March, the sixtieth session of the Commission on the Status of Women convened in New York focusing on women’s empowerment and its link to sustainable development at the United Nations Headquarters. UN Women supported all aspects of the Commission’s work. Also in March, the Inter-Parliamentary Union organized its 134th Assembly and a Global Conference of Young Parliamentarians in Lusaka (Zambia). Many useful capacity building workshops on women’s leadership in public services are taking place across regions and there will be more buzz around the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals, and more specifically around Goal 5 on achieving gender equality and empower all women and girls and the related targets. Our event section covers many of these upcoming events.
