

A Primer for Parliamentary Action

GENDER SENSITIVE RESPONSES TO COVID-19

This Primer highlights practical ways Members of Parliament (MPs) and parliamentary staff can take action to ensure COVID-19 response and recovery decision-making address women's needs. It is informed by the differential impacts of the disease on women as documented to date, and the common needs and challenges expressed by MPs and parliamentary staff adapting to new priorities and ways of working around the world.

A Checklist is included to guide MPs and parliamentary staff on gender sensitive options for COVID-19 response and recovery both during and beyond the pandemic.

COVID-19
RESPONSE

INTRODUCTION

Parliaments have a responsibility to respond to the COVID-19 pandemic with gender sensitivity. This is vital for public order and the rule of law, the effective containment of the disease, and the health and wider well-being of the public, both now, and in the future.

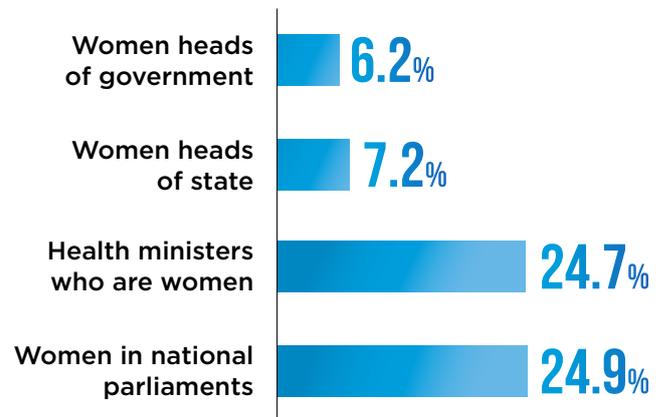

Every public office holder has an obligation to serve the women they represent by addressing gender equality as part of their work; in a pandemic, this obligation is even more important. Response and recovery policies and budgets that benefit from women's contributions will lead to better informed decisions, more just outcomes, and greater resilience against health emergencies like COVID-19. The role of parliaments in legislating and scrutinizing governments' policies and budgets during the crisis is key to curtailing deepening gender inequality.

Times of crisis, however, can lead to decisions being taken in haste, without consideration of women's rights, experiences and perspectives, especially as these are often omitted in decision-making in 'normal' times.

Women make up 70 per cent of health and social sector workers,<sup>1</sup> but are only 25 per cent of national legislators.<sup>2</sup> Whereas men are universally represented in decision-making bodies around COVID-19 response, women are systematically underrepresented among political, health and economic decision-makers. At best, this perpetuates the false perception that men are better crisis managers. At worst, health crisis budget and policy responses that exclude women from consultation or decision-making - or that don't consider gender at all - are not only less effective but can cause harm.<sup>3</sup>

“Just think about it: globally, women make up 70 per cent of workers in the health and social sector, and they do three times as much unpaid care work at home as men. Yet, they are systematically excluded from the decision-making bodies that initiate life-saving emergency protocols in health-care settings.”

OPPORTUNITIES OF GENDER SENSITIVE PARLIAMENTARY ACTION IN CRISIS TIMES

1. Gender equality is a matter of human rights and democratic principles - including political equality, public participation, transparency, public service, deliberation, and fair and just decision-making - which the public counts on parliaments to embody and promote, in a crisis.
2. Parliaments can seize moments of crises as opportunities to trial and showcase institutional reflexivity, adaptation, and innovation; the inclusion of women's different experiences, perspectives, talents and skills ensures better informed decisions, fairer outcomes, and evolution of 'group think' and traditional ways of doing things.
3. MPs have the opportunity and power to address gender equality as part of their everyday work during and outside of crisis; when the public see themselves as represented among those making decisions that affect their lives, a parliament is likely to be considered more legitimate.
4. Parliaments can lead by example and ensure diversity of views and inclusion when responding to a crisis; research<sup>4</sup> has shown that women legislators have a high capacity to collaborate across partisan lines, even in the most politically combative environments.
5. Out of crises, arise opportunities for a 'new normal': gender sensitive procedural and budgetary responses of parliaments today can translate to institutional changes that last into tomorrow, and move the world closer to gender equality.

KNOW THE FACTS: IMPACTS OF COVID-19 ON WOMEN<sup>5</sup>

Across every sphere, from health to the economy, security to social protection, the impacts of COVID-19 are exacerbated for women and girls simply by virtue of their sex.

UN Policy Brief: The Impact of COVID-19 on Women

INCREASED BURDENS ON WOMEN WHO PLAY A DISPROPORTIONATE ROLE IN DISEASE RESPONSE:

- Globally, women make up 70 per cent of workers in the health and social sector.<sup>6</sup>
- Women are over-represented - and thus more exposed to the virus - among frontline workers such as nurses, paramedics, cleaners, (super)market workers, teachers, and childcare workers - risking infection and their ability to work.
- Before COVID-19 became a universal pandemic, women were doing three times as much unpaid care and domestic work as men.<sup>7</sup> When health systems are overloaded,<sup>8</sup> a greater burden is placed on care in the home and that burden lands largely with women.

INCREASED RISKS TO WOMEN'S ECONOMIC SECURITY AND EMPOWERMENT:

- Women are over-represented in sectors hardest hit economically by the pandemic, such as hospitality and tourism, and disproportionately work in insecure labour - putting them at greater risk of losing their incomes in the short, medium and longer term.
- Disruptions, including movement restrictions, can impede women's ability to make a living and meet their families' basic needs as was seen in previous disease outbreaks, such as the Ebola crisis.<sup>9</sup>
- Additional caring burdens might limit girls' access to equal educational opportunities if not monitored; as educational provision moves online, girls and boys will not always have equal access to necessary resources, equipment and basic infrastructure or services.

INCREASED RISKS TO WOMEN'S PHYSICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL SECURITY:

- Globally, 243 million women and girls aged 15-49 were subjected to sexual and/or physical violence perpetrated by an intimate partner in the previous 12 months; emerging data shows that since the outbreak of COVID-19, domestic and gender-based violence (GBV) have increased during the pandemic with households placed under the increased strains that come from security, health and money worries, and cramped, confined living conditions.<sup>10</sup>
- Women are forced to stay at home with their abusers, and homeless and stateless women are rendered more vulnerable with fewer opportunities to find shelter with appropriate health and security requirements.
- Before the pandemic, high proportions of women in parliament, and women parliamentary staff, were subject to sexual harassment and GBV; as GBV trends are worsening with COVID-19, women in politics risk being marginalized further.<sup>11</sup>

INCREASED RISKS TO WOMEN'S DISTINCT HEALTH NEEDS:

- Social distancing and lockdowns negatively affect women's access to medical care as COVID-19 takes precedence in hospitals.
- Overstretched health services often divert resources away from services women need, including women's access to reproductive services risk being adversely affected as face-to-face engagement with medical workers and access to medicines, assistance with reproductive technologies and (where legal) abortion services, counselling and medical provision, and women's ante- and post-natal care options are likely to be restricted.<sup>12</sup>

INCREASED RISKS TO DEVELOPMENT & HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE BUDGETS FOR GENDER EQUALITY:

- Women and women's organizations rely heavily on foreign aid and humanitarian assistance, including the support of international and local non-government organisations.
- Donors may be tempted to recuperate emergency budgets spent on national responses to the pandemic by reducing their funding to gender sensitive development and humanitarian assistance, setting back any progress on gender equality in the poorest and most conflict-afflicted countries.

WHAT MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT CAN DO

“As a former MP myself, I know the critical role parliaments can play in health emergencies. Parliaments ensure public health systems are adequately funded. They build accountability through oversight of government actions.”

Dr. Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO)

LEGISLATE

- Ensure that any emergency response and recovery legislation, emergency and/or relief packages and budgets have been developed on the basis of sex disaggregated data, gender analysis and consultations with gender experts, and include a gender impact assessment.
- Introduce or support amendments to response and recovery legislation, stimulus packages and budgets, social protection policies – or introduce new legislation – that seek to rectify any identified sources of gender discrimination or exacerbate gender inequality.
- Reflect on whether any legislation that was intended to advance women’s rights and was already programmed or expected over the next six to 12 months will be delayed as a result of COVID-19 (e.g. on ending violence against women, protections for women’s reproductive and sexual health and rights, equal pay, elimination of discriminatory laws, or any special measures and other legislation for gender equality) and:
  - Identify and monitor any potential impacts that the delay of this legislation will have on women; and
  - Consider any measures that could be taken to ensure the legislation is not lost or forgotten, such as lobbying for this legislation to remain on the parliament’s agenda.

SCRUTINISE

- Oversee that government’s emergency legislation, relief packages and budgets have specifically responded to known gender policy implications, by asking oral and written questions about:
  - The involvement of women in the government’s COVID-19 response, including who is participating on specialised groups or task forces and who is representing the government to the media;

- The involvement of gender experts in the government’s design of emergency legislation, relief packages and budgets;
- The latest statistics and trends on violence against women and the adequacy of protection/service systems in place;
- Continuous monitoring and evaluation of the gendered implications of the government’s emergency legislation, relief packages and budgets.

- Advocate for the establishment of a gender-focused parliamentary body and/or nominate members to sit on COVID-19 related parliamentary inquiries/hearings that consider related gender policy implications by:
  - Ensuring women’s organisations and civil society organisations with specialised gender expertise, as well as relevant academics are invited to give evidence;
  - Encouraging women MPs and other gender advocates within parliament to join;
  - Considering advocating for inquiries/hearings that are solely dedicated to gender policy implications;
  - Making gender specific recommendations in the report and other parliamentary outputs.
- Use gender budgeting tools to assess the effectiveness, efficiency, relevance and impact of COVID-19 related policy measures on women and girls, specifically by studying any budget cuts and advocating against cuts to programmes or initiatives meant to support women and gender equality.

“Assessing how a budget addresses the needs of women and men is an important part of legislative scrutiny... Gender Sensitive Budgeting tools should be used to assess how COVID-19 support package measures affect women and girls and analyze how budget allocations, budget changes and/or cuts will affect gender equality.”

UN Women Technical Brief: Gender responsive budgeting in the context of COVID-19 (forthcoming).<sup>13</sup>

- Where COVID-19 related gender discrimination and inequality is uncovered, consider (depending on the country context):
  - Speaking with the Minister responsible;
  - Raising the matter on the floor of the House or through other appropriate parliamentary action;
  - Taking the issue up with the designated parliamentary leader and/or women's parliamentary body tasked with responsibility for gender sensitive COVID-19;
  - Networking with members 'across the floor' to propose new legislation or amendments; and/or
  - Raising the issue with the media, women's organizations and/or party leadership.

REPRESENT

- Get a comprehensive analysis of COVID-19's impact on women in your community by reaching out to:
  - National and local gender equality mechanisms, as well as relevant line ministry focal points;
  - Women and feminist organisations, bodies that represent different civil society groups, such as networks, lobby groups, non-government organisations, and international organizations;
  - Trade unions that represent female-dominant workforces (e.g. health workers, super(market) workers, childcare workers, teachers, hospitality and tourism workers);
  - Gender experts including feminist economists, women academics, health professionals and journalists that specialise in pandemics, gender-based violence, gender economics, women's leadership.
- Channel women constituents' voices into COVID-19 decision making by organising virtual town halls (e.g. online or tele-town halls), encouraging text message exchanges or running community online surveys, and sending the results to the relevant Minister or opposition counterpart.
- Nominate, or encourage, women health leaders in the community to crisis management teams and pandemic relief task forces.
- Support the adoption of declarations or statements that promote women's political participation and leadership in COVID-19 response.

ACT AS ROLE MODELS

- Get tested for COVID-19, always practice physical distancing, wash hands/use hand sanitiser as often as practicable and model adherence to all other relevant health guidelines and precautions recommended by relevant global and national health institutions.
- Give women MPs equal access to 'the floor', to showcase their contribution to the crisis response.
- Take a respectful, cooperative and collaborative approach to politics, set aside partisanship, self-interest and competition, denounce any incidences of sexual harassment, bullying and violence against women MPs and staff, and support institutional measures that protect women.

WHAT PARLIAMENTS CAN DO

COMMIT TO A GENDER SENSITIVE RESPONSE

- Acknowledge parliament's commitment to gender equality in all their communications and other parliamentary outputs.
- Endorse a declaration or ministerial statement pledging that COVID-19 and other health crises response and recovery will meet needs of women and girls and be developed with women's political participation.
- Ensure that all laws, policies, and budgets passed in support of COVID-19 response and recovery take into full consideration the needs and interests of women and girls, based on a thorough gender assessment and application of gender responsive budgeting tools, track policy implementation and budget expenditures for their impact on women and gender equality.

CULTIVATE A GENDER SENSITIVE ENVIRONMENT IN PARLIAMENT DURING THE CRISIS

- Apply, enforce or where necessary, revise or develop, codes of conduct that sanction gender insensitive language and behaviour, and institute grievance and disciplinary mechanisms that allow for an immediate redress of any incidence of gender discrimination, bullying, sexual harassment and violence against women.
- Eliminate gender workplace discrimination exacerbated in the response, including by:
  - Consulting Members, MP staff and parliamentary staff to identify key concerns relating to COVID-19 and parliament as a workplace; and
  - Where parliament decides to operate 'remotely':
    - Ensure all MPs and staff have equitable and effective access to digital communication devices (hardware and software) at home;
    - Ensure the disproportionate caring responsibilities of women MPs and staff are adequately compensated;
    - Establish mechanisms to monitor and review digital participation and its effect on work/life balance for MPs and staff.

PRIORITISE WOMEN'S INVOLVEMENT IN THE PARLIAMENTARY RESPONSE TO THE CRISIS

- By means of amendments to standing orders where necessary, ensure that women MPs and staff are proportionately represented in all face-to-face or virtual parliamentary meetings on COVID-19, including where quorums are applied.
- Showcase – through special debates, commemorations, or other forms of recognition – the contribution of women MPs and staff to the crisis response.

- Guarantee women a place to speak in all parliamentary debates related to the crisis.

INSTITUTE SPECIAL GENDER MAINSTREAMING PROCEDURES TO THE RESPONSE

- Encourage MPs and parliamentary staff to use gender analysis across all policy areas, including by amending the standing orders, instituting new processes, or extending existing ones, to ensure access to sex disaggregated data, and formalising relationships with gender experts across a range of policy areas.
- Task, and adequately resource, specific parliamentary bodies with responsibility for coordinating the parliament's gender sensitive response to COVID-19, such as:
  - A women's/equality committee;
  - A women's caucus or network;
  - A presiding officer/Speaker's Group on Gender and/or Equalities;
  - Parliamentary associations;
  - Gender-focused technical, research or library units;
  - Gender focused networks of elected Members and parliamentary administrative staff (sometimes referred to as workplace equality networks).
- Resource capacity building efforts that strengthen MP and staff ability to mainstream gender considerations across parliamentary work, including the pandemic response.

For examples of how parliaments are responding to COVID-19 with gender in mind, also consult Inter-Parliamentary Union's \(IPU\) country compilation of parliamentary responses to the pandemic.

MONITOR AND EVALUATE THE GENDER SENSITIVITY OF THE CRISIS RESPONSE

- Consider using the attached Checklist to assess:
  - The actions taken to ensure a gender sensitive parliamentary response to the pandemic;
  - The impact of those actions;
  - Any arising challenges in implementing changes to the parliament's structures and processes, and how were they addressed;
  - Any gender sensitive changes made to the parliament's procedures or outputs during the pandemic that could be maintained in its aftermath.

PREPARE FOR A FUTURE ‘BUSINESS DISRUPTION’

- Incorporate gender sensitive lessons into the parliament’s existing business continuity plan or corporate strategy.

SHARE LESSONS WITH OTHER PARLIAMENTS

- Consider the opportunities that can be taken to share lessons in gender sensitive parliamentary responses with other parliaments regionally or internationally and share those lessons with all MPs and parliamentary staff.

“Building in the needs of women offers an opportunity for us to ‘build back better’. What better tribute to our shared humanity than to implement policy actions that build a more equal world?”

ANNEX: A CHECKLIST FOR PARLIAMENTS

This Checklist accompanies the Primer for Parliaments: Gender Sensitive Responses to COVID-19. It is offered as a complementary guide for use by MPs and parliamentary staff on gender sensitive options for COVID-19 response and recovery as well as a strategy to ensure gender sensitive parliamentary business and working arrangements, both during and beyond, the pandemic. The Checklist covers four key areas of parliamentary work:

1. Parliamentary Business & Legislation

The COVID-19 pandemic has prompted significant changes to all workplaces, including parliaments. Parliaments should consider the impact of these changes on women MPs and staff and adopt a gender mainstreaming approach in their work.

2. Parliamentary Scrutiny & Oversight

Parliaments have the opportunity and power to ensure government responses to the pandemic meet international obligations to the goal of gender equality, eliminate all forms of violence against women and gender discrimination.

3. Parliamentary Representation

In ensuring that women's voices are raised in all COVID-19 related deliberations, MPs should consider targeted consultations with women in their constituencies and communicating their concerns as widely as possible.

4. Parliamentary Evaluation & Building Back Better

Parliaments should take the opportunity presented by the pandemic to reflect on the gender sensitivity of their crisis response, and to make changes where appropriate.

1. PARLIAMENTARY BUSINESS

Questions

1.1. Parliamentary organization & leadership

- Which parliamentary bodies and parliamentary leaders are responsible for taking the lead on legislating or budgeting for policies gender sensitive actions in response to COVID-19, or scrutinizing those of the government?
- What are the arrangements for coordinating their actions and communicating their actions and effects to elected Members, parliamentary staff, and the media?
- Do the relevant parliamentary bodies and leaders have access to comprehensive, sex-disaggregated data?
- Does the parliament have sufficient in-house gender expertise, across all policy areas? If not, how will it recruit and fund additional gender expertise?

1.2. Committee work

a. Gender sensitive COVID-19 inquiries & evidence gathering

- Where ad hoc committees are established to undertake COVID-19 inquiries or hearings, is their membership and leadership gender balanced?
- Do parliamentary rules need to be reviewed (or 'suspended') to ensure all parliamentary committees can immediately initiate/undertake COVID-19 related inquiries and adopt a gender sensitive approach?
- Do any committee resources need to be increased – with additional personnel including gender experts, and other material resources – to enable committees to adopt a gender sensitive approach to their COVID-19 related inquiries?
- Do all committees have access to sex-disaggregated data in their policy areas?
- In undertaking their COVID-19 inquiries, hearings or other legislative work, are efforts being made by committees to specifically target women's organizations and civil society organizations to submit oral or written evidence?
- Has gender sensitive parliamentary stakeholder mapping been undertaken and used for COVID-19 inquiries? Do committees have sufficient administrative capacity to efficiently and effectively undertake such mapping?
- What monitoring processes have been established to ensure a diversity of individuals appearing before the committee (whether in person or virtually)?

b. Gender sensitive analysis of laws & budgets

- Have gender budgeting tools been used to assess the effectiveness, efficiency, relevance and impact of COVID-19 related expenditures on women and girls?
- Have COVID-19-related policies, laws and programmes considered the key targets or beneficiaries?
  - Have different groups of women been considered in the policy?
  - Will women and men from different groups equally benefit?
- Are the policy, programme or legislation's resources and benefits reaching equally intended beneficiaries?
  - Are the means of distribution the resources/benefits equally accessible to women and men?
  - Are there any women only rules of distribution?
  - Are women and men equally able to use these resources, in practice?
- Are there anticipated gender differences in social and economic (i) costs and (ii) gains of the policy, programme, or law under review? If so, what are they?
- Is the policy or programme intervention expected to worsen, maintain or challenge existing gender relations?

c. Gender sensitive COVID-19 reporting & recommendations

- Are gender sensitive recommendations being made by the committee either in (i) formal reports; and (ii) other committee outputs?
- Was a monitoring processes established to analyze government and parliamentary responses to gender sensitive recommendations made by the committee?
- Where gender discrimination and inequality are revealed by the committee, have any of the actions listed below been undertaken:
  - Speaking with the Minister responsible?
  - Raising the matter on the floor of the Chamber or through other appropriate parliamentary action?
  - Taking the issue up with the designated parliamentary leader and or women's parliamentary body tasked with responsibility for gender sensitive COVID-19?
  - Networking with members 'across the floor' to propose new legislation or amendments?
  - Raising the issue with the media, women's organizations and/or political parties?

1.3. Virtual/digital participation

- Have all digital or remote initiatives used to allow parliaments to convene during the pandemic, e.g. through video conferencing and remote voting, been subjected to a gender equality impact assessment?
- Do women and men MPs and appropriate parliamentary staff have equitable and effective digital provision (hardware and software) in their homes? If not, will additional funds be provided?
- Do women and men MPs and appropriate parliamentary staff have equitable and effective proficiency in using digital equipment? If not, will training be provided?
- Has the parliament accommodated women MPs and parliamentary staff's disproportionate caring responsibilities in their new ways of working, and how?
- Has parliament provided additional financial support for MPs and parliamentary staff with caring needs?
- Has the parliament established mechanisms by which to monitor and review digital participation by women and men MPs and staff?

1.4. Institutional conduct & culture online and offline

- Have parliamentary leaders restated the importance of parliamentary codes of conduct, stressed their applicability to the highest level, and specifically noted that unparliamentary behavior includes sexual harassment, bullying and violence against women?
- Has there been a review of existing codes of conduct and ethics for MPs and staff? Is there a need to develop additional codes that highlight gender sensitive behavior and language?
- What is the proportion of women MPs attending 'face to face' parliamentary sittings during the pandemic, relative to the proportion of women in parliament?
  - Has the use of, and criteria for, quorums been reviewed?
  - Has the use of proxies – for voting and for other activities e.g. committees – been reviewed?
  - Are new or revised Standing Orders (SOs) introduced regarding gender balance of quorums and proxies (or at least reflect the proportion of women in the parliament)?
- Do women and men MPs equally speak in debates, raising points of order, moving motions, introducing bills, asking questions, moving legislative amendments on COVID-19?
  - Should SOs and other rules that require MPs to act 'in person' be reviewed, e.g. to table amendments or submit questions?
  - Are criteria being used to allocate speaking opportunities/times on COVID-19 debates? What are they?
  - Is there a need to amend or suspend SOs to introduce gender sensitive rules around speaking opportunities overall?
- Is the parliament monitoring the participation of MPs in debates and publishing sex-disaggregated data on MPs' participation?
- Are gender roles and responsibilities inadvertently reinforced in any parliamentary 'crisis' arrangements? In particular: are only non-carers required to attend sittings; how is maternity provision impacted by 'virtual' parliaments; are work-life balance efforts focused only on women?

1.5. Workplace health & safety

- Have key concerns relating to COVID-19 and parliament as a workplace been identified?
  - Did consultations include all MPs and parliamentary staff?
  - Have the specific needs of women and parents been accommodated?
  - Given the increased likelihood of interacting with individuals infected with the virus, do all MPs have access to COVID-19 swab tests?
  - Are all MPs' staff and parliamentary staff who work in close proximity with Members assured of their access to swab testing, where necessary?
  - Has physical distancing been enforced across parliaments: The Chamber; voting spaces; committee rooms; dining areas; kitchens; and other backroom operations?
  - Is Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) made available for MPs and staff?
  - Have (additional) mental and physical support helplines and services been provided for Members, parliamentary staff, and MPs' staff?

1.6. Programmed legislation

- Was there legislation relating to gender equality and women's rights that had been programmed or expected in the next six to 12 months?
  - Were there measures that were focused on women only, related to an equalities issue, or that would be considered to disproportionately impact women?
  - Are there gendered implications of any potential delays in the passage of this legislation? If so, what are they?
  - What legislation remains a priority?
  - Are parliamentary measures taken to ensure that this legislation is not deprioritized?

2. PARLIAMENTARY SCRUTINY & OVERSIGHT

Questions

2.1. COVID-19 response, recovery, including emergency legislation, relief packages & budgets

- Are gender policy areas prioritized in response and recovery (i) legislation; (ii) relief packages; and (iii) budgets (either mainstreamed or as standalone elements)?
- Have emergency (i) legislation; (ii) relief packages; and (iii) budgets:
  - Been developed on the basis of sex-disaggregated data and gender analysis?
  - Involved government or external gender experts?
  - Included a gender impact assessment (designed by gender experts)?
  - Specifically responded to known gender policy implications such as:
    - Women's over-representation among COVID-19 frontline workers, such as nurses, paramedics, cleaners, (super)market workers, teachers, and childcare workers;
    - Women's greater economic insecurity and precarious employment, pre-COVID-19;
    - Women's existing unpaid care work and other domestic labor, as well as its impact on women's paid employment patterns;
    - Increased likelihood of domestic and gender-based violence as a consequence of movement restrictions/confinement;
    - Likely restrictions on women's reproductive rights, including (where legal) more limited access to abortion advice and services, and the full availability of maternity services?
    - Specifically considered women's reliance, in developing countries, on foreign aid and humanitarian assistance, including the support of international and local non-government organizations?
- Are there measures in response and recovery (i) legislation; (ii) relief packages; and (iii) budgets (and amounts) that are for women only?

2.2. New, specialized COVID-19 government groups, commissions, taskforces

- Where a government has established a specialized political COVID-19 group (over and above any other government committees/cabinets who may also be working on the pandemic):
  - Are women and men equally represented? If not, what is the proportion of women?
  - Is the Minister for Women, or equivalent line minister, a member?
- Where a government has established a specialized COVID-19 group:
  - Are women and men equally represented? If not, what is the proportion of women?
  - Is the Minister for Women, or equivalent line minister, a member?
  - Is there a significant number of experts with gender expertise included as members?

2.3. Parliamentary organization & leadership

- Which parliamentary bodies and parliamentary leaders are responsible for taking the lead on scrutinizing the government's gender sensitive actions in response to COVID-19?
- What are the arrangements for coordinating the government's actions?
- What are the arrangements for communicating the government's actions and effects to elected Members, parliamentary staff, and the media?
- Is it established who speaks for the opposition on the key television and radio programmes?
- Do the relevant parliamentary bodies and leaders have access to comprehensive, sex-disaggregated data?
- Do they have sufficient formal powers and resources to undertake their scrutinizing functions?
- Does the parliament have sufficient in-house gender expertise, across all policy areas? If not, how will it recruit and fund additional gender expertise?

3. PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION

Questions

3.1. Consultation & communication with women constituents

- Are women's voices heard in parliament as it responds to the COVID-19 pandemic, especially where social distancing measures are in place?
- Have virtual town halls, text messages through mobile devices, community online surveys been organized with women constituents?
- Has the advice been sought of, or information requested from, the following?
  - National/local gender equality mechanisms, relevant line ministry gender focal points;

3.2. Women's participation in electoral politics

- Where consideration of online or postal voting has occurred, have gender equality impact assessments been undertaken? For instance:
  - What consideration has been given to different electoral registration schemes on women's participation rates?
  - What consideration has been given to questions of gender differentiated access to the Internet or mobile phones?
  - What consideration has been given to women who may lack literacy or 'national' language skills?
- What consideration has been given to the impact of the practice of family voting on women voters?

4. PARLIAMENTARY EVALUATION & BUILDING BACK BETTER

4.1. Gender sensitive reflection

- In anticipation of the post pandemic, has the parliament's relevant body tasked with COVID-19 response, or MPs and parliamentary staff been invited to review the questions in this checklist?
- Questions to consider in a post-pandemic assessment:
  - What actions were taken to ensure a gender sensitive parliamentary response to the pandemic?
  - What impact did the actions have?
  - What challenges arose in implementing any changes, and how were they addressed?

4.2. Applying lessons to the 'new normal'

- What gender sensitive changes made to the parliament's procedures or outputs during the pandemic can be maintained in its aftermath?
  - Will temporary standing orders be made permanent?
  - Will outreach to gender experts become systematic and sustained?
  - Will specialized gender media coverage be required?

4.3. Preparing for a future 'business disruption'

- Have gender sensitive lessons been incorporated into the parliament's existing business continuity plan or corporate strategy?

4.4. Lesson-learning with other parliaments

- Following the pandemic, what opportunities can be taken to share lessons in gender sensitive parliamentary responses with other parliaments regionally or internationally?
- How will those lessons be shared with all MPs and parliamentary staff?
